

AMSE Annual Conference, Berlin, 10 – 12 June 2010

The Association of Medical Schools in Europe is delighted to be returning to Germany after a gap of twenty years, to hold its Annual Conference in Berlin in 2010. The AMSE Conference is one of many events marking the 300th anniversary of the Charité, and – fittingly – the theme of the Conference will be:

“Internationalisation of Medical Schools”

Berlin, and Charité–Universitätsmedizin, lie at a physical and intellectual meeting place in the developing international mission and activity of medical schools. AMSE itself is, by definition, an international organisation. The Conference will explore questions such as:

- Why should a medical school have an international strategy – what are the arguments for and against?
- How do institutions develop this role?
- We think globally, but why, when we have so much to do in Europe?
- What are the challenges in harmonising medical school functions across Europe?

This promises to be an important and stimulating meeting: we look forward to welcoming you in Berlin in 2010.
